

NEW NOVEL REFLECTS REGENERATED FRANCE

"Eve Dorre" Rich in Scenes
Showing Recent Changes in Gallo Character.

How France faced the great war in the beginning, and why France today seems a different nation from that of 1914, is beautifully illustrated in the following verbal picture of what the home-keeping women in one chateau did to prepare themselves for the care of the wounded soldiers coming back from the front:

"At night we all assemble in the great hall of guards at the chateau while Marie reads aloud the most important parts in a book of 'First Aid to the Injured.' All the women from the village are there, and each one in turn is called upon to prepare her lesson, like a child, to prove that she has understood."

"And through all, above all, is heard the thundering of the cannon, the terrible cannon, in the distance, and we know that each shot may mean the death of some one we love. No words of sympathy are exchanged, for that would be disastrous, and the women wish to be as brave as their men. All is calm and well organized, and even the weakest would be ashamed to weep."

Example of Preparedness.

Germany can scarcely excel this one, which is taken from the story of "Eve Dorre," by Emily Vile Strother, of Baltimore, which was reviewed in the Times "Book Reviews" column recently. This personal memoir, or so it is fashioned in the telling, must have a double interest for New Yorkers. For, in addition to possessing a charm of its own, it is written by the sister of the well-remembered Herman Knickerbocker Vile, to whom she has dedicated the tale. One suspects that Herman was the original of Eve's favorite brother in her narrative.

Although in "Eve Dorre" the reader follows the life adventures of another American girl who began her European career as a Daisy Miller and ends, unlike that immortal heroine, as a useful, wholesome wife and mother, the main current of interest in the book is the series of pictures the author sketches of the differences between life in the '90s and '00s of the last century and that of today.

More Than "Another Novel."

The reader feels the gradual strengthening of the moral tone of the people Eve Dorre lives among in Paris and in the French countryside. It is made to realize this not only through the passing record of physical improvements in living conditions, but also through the conduct of the personages of the story as it proceeds.

So this tale of Mrs. Strother taken on the character of being something more important than just another novel. It becomes another contribution to the great study which will be made at some future day of the remarkable changes in the character of the French nation in the last forty years.

300-EGG HEN IS HERE.

Shatters Old Laying Record and Still Going Strong.

The 300-egg hen is here, declares the Philadelphia North American, which says:

Lady Edgeline reached that record yesterday on the three hundred and forty-seventh day of the year.

She has eighteen days more to add to her score and to increase her fame as the greatest layer in history, a triumph of scientific breeding, a triumph of the village agricultural experiment station, Newark, Del., where the North American information bureau is located. The record is being conducted, the officials and students are certain Lady Edgeline will pass the 400 mark.

At any rate, the little White Leghorn hen, raised at Greensboro, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, is the first chicken in the world to lay 300 eggs in a year or less in an authentic contest. The pen of five birds to which she belongs holds high place for team work.

WOULD EXPORT RACE HORSES

French Breeders Passing Through Serious Business Crisis.

Breeders of race horses in France are passing through a serious business crisis, says a cable to the New York Herald. Deprived of the benefits of racing on one hand and unable to sell their horses either in France or abroad on the other, the majority of the breeders are unable to support fresh expenses.

There can be no question of the resumption of racing, and for this very reason no possibility of selling blood stock in France, but exportation is taking place freely from the countries abroad, with France. Why should French breeders be prohibited from selling to Americans? Is the question frequently asked among racing stable proprietors.

Americans who own studs or stables in France and who generously have given material and moral support to French racing for many years past, should have the right of exporting to their own country those animals which are their own property and which the French war authorities are unable to utilize, it is declared.

WHAT'S NECESSARY TO ENTER HALL OF FAME

You Must Be Eminently Respectable, and, if Possible, Born in Massachusetts.

What is necessary to enter the Hall of Fame? The Philadelphia Public Ledger tells it as follows:

Halt! Muse! Now sing the fame of Joseph Henry and Elias Howe! They have been elected to the Hall of Fame, and the truth is, Muse, you are expected to know about them. No, Joseph Henry did not say, "Give me liberty or give me death." That was Patrick. Patrick wasn't elected. He was too much of a roughneck. Joseph was secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.

Elias Howe? He was father of the sewing machine. If you've forgotten him, Muse, you must belong to the younger generation. All the youngsters have, of course.

Mark Hopkins? A humorous contemporary of Artemus Ward? Good gracious, no! You're thinking of Bl. Hopkins and Mark Twain. Mark Hopkins was American Education for about half a century. Of course you couldn't be expected to remember that, but you ought to have an encyclopedia in the Pantheon Public Library. You wonder how Mark got in when Roger Williams drew John Paul Jones' name out? Seems a bit queer, doesn't it? Of course, Roger is responsible for Providence and Newport, and he wrote a book about the leader of the Quakers called "George Fox Dugged Out of His Burrows," but he stood rather finely for religious liberty at a time when you couldn't say "An honest God's the noblest work of man" without being burned at the stake.

As for John Paul Jones—Shades of the Serapis and the Bonhomme Richard! Will not their cannon ring as long in the ears of posterity as the clack of the sewing machine? Yes, yes, but the founder of the American navy was a bit of a pirate, according to British views, and the editors of the "Book Reviews" column recently, famous or only notorious. Don't you understand, Muse, that to have the laurel wreath of Fame rest upon your brow you must be eminently respectable, and, if possible, born in Massachusetts.

JOHN L. "COMES BACK."

But It Is to Get a Jewel-Studded Belt.

John L. Sullivan can "come back" the Philadelphia Evening Ledger says: John L. Sullivan, noted lecturer on prohibition, has a belt again. Time was when Mr. Sullivan possessed what boys called the "champion belt of the world." Boozed and a strong right arm proved incompatible in the case of this sterling pugilist. He stood upon his own happy round which now temporarily is ended with Jess Willard.

At the same time, it seems, Mr. Sullivan turned and and as a security a jewel-studded gold belt presented him by admirers. The proceeds of the pawnshop, hocking, and giving as security went to him. That was in 1902.

Yesterday, twenty-three years later, having quelled the demon and conquered, having braved the perils of temperance lectures and conquered, having out-pugilized a general in the United States army, John L. Sullivan laid down $5,300 and redeemed his belt.

It was a notable victory for prohibition.

POTENT GERM DESTROYER.

But Trimethylmethoxyphenol Has Fearful Name to Carry.

Clinical tests of the new drug trimethylmethoxyphenol have advanced far enough to induce American Medicine editorially to praise it, though admitting that it must undergo much more study before it can be hailed as the best of intestinal germ slayers, says the New York Sun.

In its September issue American Medicine says of trimethylmethoxyphenol: "This new drug, which J. T. Ainslie Walker, the English chemist, has discovered, has been under critical clinical investigation by disinterested observers for many months. These investigations seem to justify the early expectations that this drug will be of remarkable value as an intestinal bactericide. Introduced into the intestinal canal, it is forty times more potent as a destroyer of germs than a 5 per cent solution of pure carbolic acid would be. The new drug apparently has no toxic or poisonous effects, and it is not absorbed or altered in any way in the body. Just how it kills germs is so far a mystery. Many drugs that try out successfully in the chemical laboratory fail when tried on human beings in the clinic, but so far trimethylmethoxyphenol seems to have met every test."
